CLOVER POLLINATION

Start the seed set early. That's the rule for lucerne seed growers of the Peace River region, say researchers at the Beaverlodge Experimental Farm.

Agri-chemist Peter Pashko and Forage Crops Specialist C.R. Elford point out that the longer pollination is delayed the less will be the likelihood of suitable results. With our short season here, they say, we have to use all the know-how available.

For most of our forage legumes honey bees are the indispensable pollinators. A little in the evening. It takes on the wild bees for lucerne. Red clover will profit from honey bee visits if preferred crops like alfalfa clover, vetch clover and trefoil are not close by.

Now it takes five weeks from seed set to maturity for vetch clover, and four weeks for red clover, alfalfa clover and trefoil, the researchers say - so the earlier they can be pollinated the better.

But the bees in these when the plants are 50% in bloom, they advise. This will give the bees a heading to work on, and they will be kept busy as the flowers continue to open. Recommendations are one-half to one colony of honey bees per acre for alfalfa clover, trefoil and red clover, and one colony per acre for vetch clover.

There's another point, the researchers say. The plants have only a certain amount of energy. If they are not pollinated they have no flowering. If seed is set early most of the energy goes into seed production and a more even crop is likely.

Again, later seed set takes longer to ripen. As fall approaches the days close in, the temperature drops, and the early vigor of the plants starts to wane. As the days shorten the time from seed set to maturity lengthens. In fact at Beaverlodge, alfalfa clover seed took 25 days to mature in July. In late August it took 30 days.

With the killing frosts of all (28 degrees or lower) the crop year ends. The average date of the first killing frost at Beaverlodge over the past 45 years is September 19. Early pollination, say the scientists, as well as reducing the frost damage harvest provides for faster seed set, better yields, and more uniform ripening of the seed.

FALL CHECK-UP TIME FOR THE DAIRY HERD.

This is the time of year when all Alberta dairymen should check feed and bedding requirements carefully. It is also the time to look over the dairy herd to make sure that none of the cows going into the barn will be "milkie booties".

R.P. Dixon, Supervisor of Alberta's Dairy Cattle Improvement Service, points out that low producing dairy cows are very expensive items in a dairymen's operation. Too often efficient high producing cows have to keep the low producers. By using records of production to cull the low producers, dairymen will avoid "winter booties".

Mr. Dixon also recommends taking an accurate inventory of this winter's roughage supplies so that plans can be made for this feeding period. Three or four tons of roughage should be allowed for each mature milking cow. Approximately half this amount is required by each yearling heifer. If a shortage of roughage in the form of hay is anticipated, it might be a good idea to use more silage. Also a little silage may be used for an early spring pasture will help out a great deal if roughage supplies are insufficient to carry the herd through the winter feeding period.

Feeding for the dairy herd is important from both the sanitary and the health point of view of the herd. Six to ten pounds of bedding per cow per day is adequate when the herd is kept in a stallion barn, says Mr. Dixon. Approximately twice this amount is needed, however, when loose housing is used. It is far better to have some bedding left at the end of the winter than it is to run short before the feeding period is over.

Mrs. Raynor, "It always do better after a good hard cry." Mrs. Smith: "So do I. I've got a few things out of my system."

Mrs. Raynor: "No, it doesn't get anything out of my system, but it does get things out of my husband."

"Pardon!" she exclaimed to her companion. "They must think I never drove before."

JUNIOR CITIZEN AWARD WINNER

STEPHEN KOVACS JASPER PLACE, ALBERTA

At a recent meeting of the Jasper Place Chamber of Commerce a well deserved tribute was paid to our sixteen year old award winner. It was an award carrying the fitting title "Young Giant" - given annually to a citizen of Jasper Place for outstanding achievement.

Stephen as you can tell is no ordinary boy. A victim of the tragic Hungarian Revolution, Stephen and his parents fled Hungary and eventually came to Canada.

Stephen knows what it is like to overcome the bitterness of having to leave his homeland. This knowledge stands him in good stead to help other new Canadian boys and girls.

He is secretary of the Senior Male Platoon of the Order of St. Michael - a position that enables him to help many teenagers with their problems by enlisting them in the educational, cultural and recreational activities of the Order.

He excels in swimming, and last year was awarded the Junior, Intermediate and Senior Bronze Medal and Award of Merit. He is a Senior Leader in swimming and last summer entered all swimming meets in and around Edmonton.

He has completed his first year of training in a recreational leadership course and is a Recreation Commission instructor at the Jasper Place Swimming Pool.

He's a good student too, and a boy who knows what it means to give of himself to his community.

We join with the editors of Alberta's weekly newspapers in extending congratulations and best wishes to Stephen Kovacs.

This is one of six announcements about the 1962-63 Junior Citizen Award winners. Calgary Power Ltd. gratefully acknowledges the active participation of Alberta's weekly newspaper editors, whose enthusiasm has done so much to make the Alberta Junior Citizen program possible. For this winner our special thanks go to M. St. Jean de Bransacville, Grand Master of the Order of St. Michael and to the Editor of the Jasper Place Suburban Times, who nominated Stephen for the award.

DR. HUGH HENDERSON REPORTS (Cont. from Page 10, Col. 3) would have delayed payment of the increase for many months to come. Mr. Deffenbacher's amendment on July 1963 urging an immediate increase, was to overcome this. It was so popular that even the Liberal government administration of John Deffenbacher.

But even in retreat, the Liberal government has managed to take over their spite on Canada's nuclear situation by refusing Mr. Deffenbacher's appeal to have the increase backdated to April 20, 1963, the date when the Liberal election promises were supposed to come through.

The Old Age Pension issue now takes its place alongside the nuclear situation in what is another example of in-crowd in Liberal thinking.

The resulting confusion damaged Mr. Pearson's prestige in London. England recently summed it up - "The New Statesman" is having the unexpected effect of making people look back reverently to the calm and courteous administration of John Deffenbacher."

All Over The Map

Boys' genuine marbles, made of stone from Bavarian quarries, were once manufactured in enormous quantities for export from Germany. Sixty such mills still existed at the end of the 19th century. The last survivor, a 1863 mill between Salzburg and Berchtesgaden, now grinds the beautifully veined little marble balls only as souvenirs.

The seed of the double coconut (Lodicea sechellorum) may weigh up to 40 pounds. The seeds of the Epiphytic orchids can weigh 25,000,000 to the ounce.

Minnesota fish in Kentucky's Mammoth Cave National Park have no eyes—they have no need for them after thousands of generations in the subterranean darkness. The fish also are colorless, and a light shining through them will reveal the beautiful veined little marble balls only as souvenirs.

The bark on the lower part of a Douglas fir may be more than a foot thick.

In the forests there are many beneficial insects—beetles that prey upon the destructive ones. They are powerful allies of the forester. Much of the time they have the destructive insects in check. We are searching for ways to make them more effective, particularly against the foreign insect pests that arrive on our shores without their natural enemies. The balance would be upset for instance has killed more than a billion beetles of true fir timber in recent years.

From the Black Forest of Germany to the mountains of Asia, Western American forest insects have imported 23 kinds of insects that prey upon the woody species. Some of them have become established but they are not yet controlling the rapid biological control. The limited in their range, no forest pests. Insects, such as the sawflies, are still the only effective and practical means of preventing outbreaks of destructive insects in our forests.

Propel Planes by Muscle Power

The day may come when a young man will take his girl out in an air cycle built for two. Girls with strong legs probably will get the most serial dates.

Though muscles will never replace engines in planes, energetic British enthusiasts still are pursuing the elusive goal of man-powered flight as a sport. They've had some success.

A slender-winged, feather-light plane has been flown more than a half-mile at 19 miles per hour. Its sole "engine" was a husky young man whose furious pedaling spun a propeller. A two-manpower plane is in the works.

HOT COMPETITION

A British industrialist has offered a $14,000 prize for the first man to propel himself over a mile-long, figure-eight course, keeping at least 10 feet above the ground. About 25 teams, including some of Britain's top aeronautical engineers, are competing in this inner space race. The Royal Aeronautical Society is contributing grants and advice.

Ironically, the jetman man-powered aircraft benefit from jet-age advances in aerodynamics. The most important development is a long, narrow wing that gives maximum lift with minimum energy.

Some of the muscle-powered planes have a wingspan of 90 feet, which poses a parking problem for a harassed commuter who dreams of hopping into a personal plane and pedaling off to work far above the maddening crowd.

Tough designers have experimented with superlight plastics, many have returned to just plain wood because it has superior strength-to-weight characteristics.

Engineers estimate that it takes from 38 to 70 horsepower to lift a plane off the ground and keep it aloft. An Olympic cyclist can pump out about 34 horsepower. Bachman's aviation out a unique flying sport combining sophisticated engineering, piloting skill, and athletic prowess.

Aeronautical engineers generally agree that a man-powered plane should have fixed wings and be driven by a propeller. Several experimenters, however, have not given up on the age-old ornithopter, a man-powered plane with flapping wings.

BIRDMEN ARE EARTHBOUND

Some years ago, one inventor raced down Crech Barrow Hill in Somerset, nearly thrashing his 10-foot wings. He tripped and fell on his face. End of experiment. Another aspiring birdman hopefully launched himself from a bridge, but flopped into the Thames. Such has been the way of the ornithopter for centuries. The most famous victim was Icarus, of Greek mythology, whose artificial wings were put together with wax. He flew too near the sun and plunged into the sea.

An 11th-century Saracen attempted to fly around the hippodrome of Constantinople in a long white robe stiffened with light rods. He rose momentarily like a bird, then fell like a rock. About the same time, Elmer of Malmesbury, an English astrologer, fitted wings to his hands and feet and leaped from a tower. He thudded to the ground but survived, gamely attributing his failure to lack of a tail.

France's Marquis de Bequerville suffered perhaps the most humiliating failure in the disaster-studded history of ornithopters. In 1742, the Marquis attached paddle-shaped wings to his legs and arms and started to flap across the Seine. He plunged into a washwoman's barge, broke both legs, and gave up flying.

New Theory of Lost Atlantis

At the height of Atlantis' power and glory, tradition has it, the legendary island-continent sank into the sea.

Since its reputed disappearance many thousands of years ago, the fabled "lost continent" has been "found" many times.

Plato's account of the cataclysm and his description of the ideal society that was thus destroyed have fired the imaginations of men for centuries on end.

Many people believe Atlantis actually existed. There are nearly as many theories about its disappearance and geographic location as there are believers.

NEAR ICELAND?

The latest of Atlantis comes from a Soviet academician. Professor Georgy Lindberg placed the submerged continent off Iceland in waters about three miles deep. But, Professor Lindberg said, the sinking occurred several million years ago, long before man is known to have appeared on earth.

A Greek seismologist, Angelos G. Gairopoulos, has theorized that Atlantis stood in the Sea of Crete, not the Atlantic Ocean, and that its remains are the present Islands of Santorin, Thirasia, and Kameni.

At other times, Atlantis has been variously situated off the northwest corner of Spain, near the Azores, on dry land in the western bulge of Africa, in the Sahara desert, in North or South America, Tunisia, Palestine, Mongolia, Antarctica—almost everywhere.

Plato, in the dialogue Timaeus, placed Atlantis in the Atlantic Ocean beyond the "Columns of Hercules" (the Strait of Gibraltar). He wrote: "The island was larger than Libya and Asia (Minor) put together, and was the way to other islands, and from the islands you might pass to the whole of the opposite continent which surrounded the true ocean."

The island, curiously formed by concentric circles of land separated by moats of water, was the home of "a great and wonderful empire which had rule over the whole island and several others, as well as parts of the continent (Europe) and of Africa as far east as Egypt."

Ten kings ruled the empire, all descendants of the god Poseidon and the mortal Cleito. The people lived in harmony, respectful of Poseidon's laws. These were inscribed on a golden column kept in a huge temple "of herod." (Continued on Page 5)

This Week's Cover Picture

Spring time in the Rockies is nice enough to inspire a haunting song, but for those who know these mighty ramparts of Western Canada, autumn is the time when the mountains are at their magnificent best. They present breathtaking expanses of green and gold as poplars and balsam trees to gold, reds and browns amid the dark evergreens. Lakes and streams sparkle with silver, and the first light snows have put white caps on the higher mountains and a light, warm haze fills the valleys in the distance. Charis Worthington of Kimberley has caught much of this autumn magic in this week's cover picture.

Along Nature's Trails

By W. Phillip Keller

There are actually three definite, distinct species of skunk in North America. There is the small, dainty, rather rare spotted skunk whom very few people ever see. Then there is the hog nosed skunk which is more commonly found in the southern regions of the country. Finally there is the common striped skunk with which practically every country boy or girl is familiar.

The striped skunk can be found in most regions from the Atlantic to the Pacific; from Hudson Bay in the north to central America in the south. They occur everywhere from sea level up to altitudes of nearly 12,000 feet in the mountains of Mexico. Virtually the only place they do not occur is in the hottest of our dry deserts.

The skunk, like the White Tail deer of the east and the moose of the west, has benefited from the activity of man in altering the countryside. Skunks thrive along the brushy margins of cleared land or wherever crops are grown in forest openings. Because of this they are now found in fairly large numbers occupying regions which formerly were foreign to them.

COME OUT AT NIGHT

Were it not that skunks are nocturnal in their habits, nearly always choosing to hunt and travel after dark, they would be seen by thousands of people, for they are really quite common all over the country. The number killed on our highways is mute testimony to this abundance.

Because of his unique ornament, the average skunk struts across the countryside fairly oblivious of danger. He makes little or no effort to conceal himself from view, feeling fairly secure because of his rear-mounted arsenal.

There are times when such bravado can be his undoing. If driven to desperate lengths by hunger, coyotes, bobcats, owls and hawks will not hesitate to tackle a skunk—even if it is at the risk of getting horribly damaged.

Necessity to say, inexperienced dogs will rush into combat with skunks, only to be sent scurrying for relief from the powerful yellow fluid that the skunk ejects from the vents below his tail.

I have had two Collies, both of which were young dogs at the time, who suffered their fate. Both of them rolled and rolled in the grass, the earth and even mud to try and dislodge the liquid. But it is tenacious and lasts a long time once it permeates the hair and hide of a dog.

IT REALLY STUCK

Even months after they'd dogs had been sprayed, if it rained or their coats got wet, the rank musky odor would return. I have since learned that gasoline is an effective antidote with which to cleanse away the clinging musk.

It is quite wrong to assume that skunks are aggressive. By contrast they are rather docile creatures, content to go quietly on their way if left alone. In fact they will take the trouble of warning a would-be opponent that he is getting too close for comfort. They stamp their front feet, grind their teeth and give little, low menacing growls.

Western Weekly Supplement—Wednesday, October 23, 1963

Common Skunk Ranges Wide Throughout North America

If, in spite of this growing evidence of displeasure and fear, the antagonist continues to crowd his luck, the skunk whisks around; raises his plumed tail and fires. One or both vents may be discharged at the same instant. The liquid is shot out with surprising accuracy in a fine, volatilized spray which will reach to about 10 or 12 feet. Even further than this if discharged downwind.

Skunks are one of those debatable members of the animal kingdom around which violent controversies arise. Because on occasion they do raid poultry runs or chicken houses, most farmers destroy them on sight. Yet they are exceedingly easy to keep out of a poultry yard since they cannot climb.

They have also been bitterly denounced by sportsmen who contend that skunks have an unbridled appetite for the eggs and young of ground nesting birds. Such an assertion seems strange in the light of abundant evidence that many birds such as grouse and quail nest near skunk dens without even being molested.

DIET IS REVELATION

A detailed study of a skunk's average diet is quite a revelation. First of all they actually dig up and eat the eggs of turtles, which is most out-of-the-ordinary. They also eat ducklings that are no more than a few days old.

The balance of their food could well be a crime list of the most hated outlaws in the agricultural world. Here are some of them: Mice, cutworms, potato beetles, white grubs, army worms, grasshoppers and larvae of all sorts. As one authority has put it very neatly—"A live skunk is worth more to agriculture than a dead skunk is to the fur trade."

Actually, as far as the fur is concerned, it has only a rather limited use in the trimming of garments. It is rich, glossy and very durable, but it does have a tendency to become odoriferous if the garment becomes damp or wet during rainy weather. This has proved a social embarrassment to those ladies who might have been led to believe they were purchasing some exotic fur under an obscure trade name.

The skunk actually has a rather docile disposition, and can, if caught young, become a delightful pet. There is a rather simple operation that will de-odorize them without difficulty. Some owners claim they are much more affectionate than cats.

Anytime that I have ever encountered skunks during the day, they have always impressed me as being very placid and docile. I had one amusing incident one morning just at dawn that I always remember with relief.

PROBLEM FOR A MOTHER

I was coming along the highway near Vaseaux Lake in the Okanagan when I encountered a skunk with three young ones trying to get across the pavement. It had rained during the night, leaving the road a slick, shiny sheet of asphalt. Just as I reached the family the mother was frantically trying to coax the reluctant youngsters to follow her across the shining expanse. It was probably the first time they had ever faced such a sight. They stood at its edge whimpering pitifully but refusing to follow.

I stopped my car, backed up a little distance so as not to frighten them, then got out with my camera to avoid development.

In desperation the old skunk suddenly picked up one of the young ones by the scruff of the neck—just like a cat—and carried him across the road. She disappeared over a cut bank into the brush beyond. I felt sure she would return for the others in a minute or two. But I waited some time in vain.

So I decided to do my duty and went to lend a hand. I was afraid the wasps might attempt to spray me. Instead they were very quiet and cuddled up snugly in my hands. To my sudden astonishment I discovered one had sat down on a small cactus, which are common in that area. There was a fleshy segment of cactus firmly attached to his seat by the painful barbs that had punctured his hide.

It was not without a certain degree of misgiving that I set about trying to free him of his torment. I took a little gentle maneuvering, but finally the barbs were pulled out and the little chap was as content as a kitten.

I carried them across the pavement; climbed the cut bank and deposited them in the bushes where their mother had disappeared. There was a long journey to make that day, so there simply wasn't time to wait until she returned to retrieve them.

NOT TRUE HIBERNATION

The young generally spend the first winter in the burrow with the adults. They do not hibernate in the true sense of sleeping through the entire winter. If the weather turns warm they will come out and prow around. Sometimes they plug the entrance of their dens with grass, leaves or sticks from the nest, if the weather turns very cold.

In the spring the old adults emerge very early to go exploring across country in search of mates. This is often while the snow is still melting from the hills and valleys. Their way, bedraggled tracks cross country in a determined manner to declare that the urge to breed is upon them.

The young are born about two months after mating. By midsummer they are old enough to accompany the adults on food gathering forays. They may hunt for mice, beetles, grubs, grasshoppers or even wild fruit of all kinds.

When capturing prey they can be very agile hunters. I have watched them hunting mice in tall grass and it seems they are nearly as nimble as coyotes at this game.

In human terminology when we wish to insult someone we often refer to him as a "skunk". Apart from their malodorous scent, I find it is a derogatory description that is not fully in accord with these creatures.

New Export From The Prairies--- Curling Brooms on Pacific Coast

One of the most amazing developments of the Pacific Coast since 1950 is the tremendous growth in the great prairie sport, curling.

Right after the war there was just one risk available in Vancouver. Curlers whistled their rocks along the ice at the old Exhibition Building and those devoted to the ancient game spent more time standing in line than they did on the ice.

Then in 1949 a group organized and built the Vancouver Curling Club. This caught on fast.

In the next 10 years curling clubs grew and flourished all over the Greater Vancouver area. In North Vancouver alone, a community of about 70,000 residents, three new clubs with 38 sheets of ice and all the essential requirements, were built.

COST TWO MILLION

First came the Capilano Winter Club, complete with ice, hockey arena, lounge, cafe and refreshment bar. It was followed by the opening in 1950 of the North Shore Winter Club, a 3,500-family club valued at close to $2,000,000. It also boasts 14 sheets of curling ice, an Olympic swimming and diving pool, lounges, a regulation size hockey rink, tennis courts and a horsehoe pitch.

High on the hills above West Vancouver is the Hollyburn Winter Club, with an indoor pool, ample room for expansion and boasting some of the wealthiest members in the community on its roster.

In Burnaby, a community situated between Vancouver and New Westminster, there are two active clubs — the Burnaby Winter Club and the McPherson Curling Club. Richmond

Strategy and concentration — they're vital points in the great game of curling that came out of Scotland, earned its most enthusiastic following on the prairies, now has become a growing sports factor on Canada's Pacific Coast.

has its own club, the Pacific Curling Club operates in Vancouver, the Marpole Curling Club is on the edge of Vancouver proper taking in the Marpole area and planned to open soon is the million-dollar Arden Curling Club which has set its membership fee at $1,000.

Out at the University of British Columbia a new ice palace, with a modern curling area opened in September and in October the official opening of the massive winter club welcomes skaters and curlers.

BOOST TO INDUSTRY

This sudden development has added a new industrial status to the Pacific Coast. It has given an impetus to makers of brooms, stoves, ice machines, sweaters, badges, food and drink suppliers, printers and varied services directly and indirectly connected with the roaring game.

An encouraging feature of this growth is the manner in which whole families have taken up the throwing and sweeping. Women's groups and student organizations are active, during the season and the travelling curler can find almost weekly bonspiels as more and more contests are promoted.

Major bonspiel on the coast is the Toleen, now going into its third year. It attracts top curlers from all clubs in British Columbia and its list of entrants reads like a curling who's who. Prizes are of high quality and new champions appear each season to battle against the old timers, the men who learned the rudiments of the game along the prairies.

In addition to the curling, these clubs all concentrate on the social life of members. There are regular dances, banquets, junior "spies", outings to other clubs and the real mark of the travelling curler is the colorful array of badges attached to his sweater. Curling is a popular topic at all coffee breaks and at private house parties. Foot mortars are many and experts blossom forth almost nightly.

It was a foregone conclusion that with all this interest and with the potential market awaiting some advertiser, that a paper devoted only to curling would find a ready acceptance. It did. PACIFIC CURLER, a 16-page offset tabloid goes out to a mailing list of 7,000 devotees of the game for the first time this year.

The publication, produced in North Vancouver and edited and published by Christy McDevitt, one of Western Canada's best known newsmen, covers all phases of curling. It will carry numerous photographs of curlers in action, concentrate on spot news, devote space to historical references and carry advice from name curlers.

It is felt along the Coast that the present surge is just the start of a continued development that may see new clubs sprouting up to accommodate the increasing demand for more curling ice.

Many residents of Greater Vancouver are former Prairie residents and they brought along with them a keen love of the game. Curling in British Columbia has always been popular in the interior but Vancouver was lukewarm until the modern clubs provided facilities which could not be ignored.

It would seem that curling is here to boom and thousands of families are happy with the tremendous development.

The Western Farm Scene

Gentle 'Schweitzer of Africa' Is Man To Be Most Admired

Asked not long ago to name the person among present-day citizens of the world I most admired, I replied without hesitation: "Albert Schweitzer, the old doctor, missionary, philosopher and writer serving in Equatorial Africa."

In a world torn with hatreds and slaughter, the life of the gentle Schweitzer holds a succession of messages and lessons. Although this man who is loathe to kill even a beetle, chose to serve in the jungles of the "Dark Continent", his teachings and the power of his examples have reverberated around the world. Early in 1963, when celebrating his 80th year in Africa, he was still working an 18-hour day, seven days a week. Invited to make a lecture tour in the United States, the near-90-year-old doctor replied that he couldn't spare the time. He sees so much to do and time is running short.

With double measure of inherited talent, Albert Schweitzer might have achieved the highest goals in many things — wealth, comfort, luxury, fame as a musician, distinction as a scientist — but his choice was to serve mankind where the need seemed most urgent. Honors did come to him but they were simply what an appreciative public insisted upon giving the humble fellow.

THREE MAJOR TALENTS

Born in the German Province of Alsace, January 14, 1875, Albert Schweitzer came from a family in which most male members were ministers, teachers or musicians. Natural gifts would have made him an outstanding pianist in any of those fields. His earliest inclination was toward music and he grew to love the organ on which he received instruction. But with the approach of maturity, his decision was to pursue a broad education and then follow the calling of his father and enter the ministry.

He was a brilliant scholar and in due course received a church appointment. But his interests were varied. He was writing, lecturing and, having kept up with his music, was in demand for recitals. In everything undertaken, he was eminently successful and life was good. But there was still a feeling of uneasiness about home and where he should serve — at least until his attention was drawn to the urgent need for medical missionaries in Central Africa. It seemed to be the call for which he had been waiting and he knew at once he had to prepare himself by embarking upon a course of studies in medicine.

Needing the end of formal medical studies, the young doctor married Helen Bresslau who was to be his invaluable aide in the great work ahead. Together, they would go to Lambarene, on the Ogouwe River, 175 paddling miles from the Atlantic coast of Africa. To finance the undertaking, he worked overtime, begged for donations and gave musical recitals. One way and another, money came in and the Schweitzers were on their way. Their arrival was early in 1913 and a multitude of sick people were waiting for them. Having trained as a nurse, Mrs. Schweitzer was able to act as the doctor's assistant in organizing and operating a hospital.

MAN THEY COULD TRUST

Of course, conditions were extremely primitive and some observers would point out that the doctor's hospital is still far from modern. But the relationship between the doctor and native people has been good and the record of medical success has been good. The African people grew to know that Albert Schweitzer was a man they could trust implicitly and they brought their ailing ones with sleeping sickness, leprosy, malaria, pneumonia and scores of other diseases. When there was payment, it was likely to be in fruit or fish.

Interruptions occurred in the Schweitzer work, one of them during the First World War when the doctor and his wife became identified among prisoners of war and were obliged to spend time in an internment camp in France. But even then, there was no reason to be idle; sick people needing attention were numerous enough and Schweitzer became the busy camp doctor.

When the war ended, Doctor Schweitzer remained in Europe for a while to complete some writing and obtain money for his return to Africa. When he did go back, he found the hospital in a state of sickening disrepair. But the welcome from native people was a warm one and the hospital was opened at once, notwithstanding its tumbledown condition. Actually, the number of patients seeking admission and help was so great that Schweitzer extended the hospital and invited a call for more doctors and nurses to join him.

REMAINED AT HOSPITAL

There were the added hardships of World War II but the Schweitzers remained at their hospital and carried on in the face of difficulties. Again the hospital had to be extended to meet demands but in some respects, the facilities had changed only a little in the period of baric splendor" in the centre of the innermost island.

Poseidon endowed Atlantis' inhabitants with every imaginable bounty, including hot and cold running water. "They used fountains both of cold and hot springs; these were very abundant, and both kinds wonderfully adapted to use by reason of the sweetness and excellence of their waters."

Lofty mountains sheltered many wealthy villages, rivers, lakes, and meadows. There were temples, gardens, and places of exercise, even a track for horse races. Ports were busy and crowded with commerce.

Plato says, in the dialogue Critias, that about 11,000 years before his own time the divine nature of Atlantis' residents began to fade, and "they became unseemly."

In a war against the Athens of that time, Atlantis was defeated. Soon after, "There occurred violent earthquakes and floods; and in a single day and night of rain all your warlike men in a body sank into the earth, and the island of Atlantis in like manner disappeared, and was sunk beneath the sea."

50 years. The great and kindly doctor has seemed to resist the advances of modern methods but has demonstrated ability to get along very well without them. Understanding and devotion to unselfish service may be more important than running water and refrigeration in a frontier hospital.

Those who have visited Lambarene tell of unsanitary conditions prevailing in the community, even among the multitude of sick people and relatives of sick people camping in tents around the hospital. But the shaggy-haired old man with heavy moustache keeps trying to meet everybody's need while, at the same time, keeping up with his writing. He doesn't, somehow, look like the doctor. But he hopes to see Volume III of the Philosophy of Civilization completed and published.

It's a rare combination to find in one man: an accomplished musician, a philosophical writer, a dedicated man of God and the master of the world's most unusual hospital. Even the animals around him seem to know the kindness of his 89-year-old heart. He would hurt no living thing. Holding a "reverence for life," Albert Schweitzer would aim to lessen the suffering and oppression everywhere in Nature's society. He might be described as one of the finest examples of Nature's Gentleman. He has been "God's right hand man" in Central Africa. And, in keeping with Schweitzer's reasoning, being kind to God's human creatures without being kind to God's other living creatures, does seem less than Godly.

The great doctor's wife died in Africa in 1957. He gives the impression that for as long as he has life, he, too, will remain right there at his hospital post in Africa.

Children's Bible Story

By Dorothy Lois Lawton

The Scapegoat And The Law

After the Israelites had built the tabernacle for God, the Lord called Moses. "Speak to the children of Israel and teach them the laws which I will give you."

One thing the Lord commanded was that only the best animals should be used for the sacrifice. God desired that the sacrifices be made when anyone was very sorry for certain sins.

God chose Aaron and two of his sons to be the priests. Aaron was to be the high priest, and his sons to be the priests. Aaron was to be the high priest, and his sons to be the priests.

Not many days later, God wanted Aaron to sacrifice a ram and a bull for himself and all the people. But before anyone could light the fire, what do you think happened? God sent His own fire to the altar. All of the people shouted and fell on their faces. After this the priests kept God's fire burning all of the time.

Then the Lord spoke again to Moses and Aaron, saying to them, "Tell the people which beasts are the clean animals they may eat." You see, some animals, such as the camel and the creeping things, were called "unclean" in Old Testament days.

Do you remember that the high-priest could enter the inner part of the tabernacle, called the Holy of Holies, only once a year? God commanded a special service to be held that day.

First, the high-priest sacrificed a young man on the altar while he asked God to forgive his sins. Then he asked God to forgive the sins of all the people.

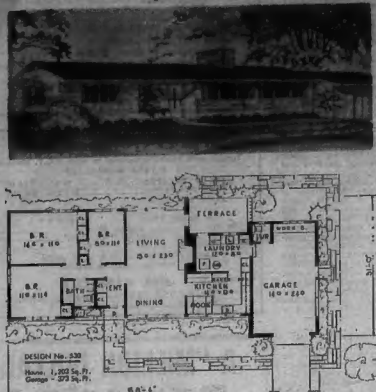

Two goats were brought to him. One goat was sacrificed on the altar. The high-priest took some of the blood into the Holy of Holies and sprinkled it on the ark of the covenant. He asked God to accept the blood and the offering, and to forgive the sins of the people.

The other goat was called the "scapegoat." The scapegoat was taken a long distance into the wilderness so that it could never find its way back. Perhaps this was to show that the sins of the people were taken away, too.

After this, the people could have their first food of the day. They were happy because their sins were all forgiven and they felt close to God.

If you want to read more of the laws of the Israelites, you will find them in the third book of the Bible, Leviticus. Here God tells His people even today, "You shall be holy for I, the Lord your God, am holy."
